What is Roller Derby?

Roller Derby is an American-originated contact sport based on formation skating around an oval track. Each team has 5 players on the track at a time (a pivot, 3 blockers and a jammer).

The pivot stays in front, controls the speed of the pack and is the last line of defense against the opposing team's jammer. Blockers assist their own jammer through the pack and keep the opposing jammer from breaking through. The jammer scores points for passing members of the opposing team.

Offense and defense are played simultaneously as each team tries to score while blocking the opposition's ability to score. The initial pass through the pack is a contest for lead jammer status. Subsequent passes through the pack are for scoring points. The lead jammer can call off the jam at any point.

A roller derby "bout" is comprised of two 30 minute periods. Each period is broken in to a series of "jams" which can last up to 2 minutes unless called off by the lead jammer.

A jammer (right front) breaks through the pack, as the opposing pivot (left) moves in to block. Jammers wear stars on their helmets and pivots wear stripes.
